

Global Warming

The Environmental Protection Agency, or EPA, was born in 1970, a time when rivers caught fire and cities were hidden under dense clouds of smoke. We had made remarkable progress since then in protecting human health and safeguarding the natural environment.

The problems with our environment around the world is it's dirty, not clean, and not colorful. The houses are always being wrecked because teenagers throw eggs at people's windows, and the owners don't clean it up. They just leave it the way it is. People litter around other people's houses, and let their dogs go to the bathroom on people's lawns. They don't clean it at all. We can fix the environment by making our neighborhood look nicer, so people won't litter. Cleaning the environment will make it look less dirty, fixing the houses so it doesn't look beat up, and cleaning the litter around the people's houses will improve things.

In April, my class and I had a round table discussion with our principal Mrs. Alston and we were talking about global warming. One thing that we mentioned is the environment around the school. We talk about fixing it for the people who live in them. We have learned that by taking small steps, we set the example for others, and change things for the better.
